Primary human hepatocytes (PHH) are increasingly used as a model for the study of liver function. PHH have been used to model human metabolic disorders, such as Wilson disease, hereditary haemochromatosis and alkaptonuria. As PHH are easily obtained, require minimal manipulation and are rapidly metabolically active, they are a unique model of liver cell function. However, because of their use in the screening of drugs with a clinical pharmacological and toxicological impact, due to their being cultured in xenobiotic-free conditions, recent ethical concerns have been raised. In addition, PHH, used as transplants for the treatment of patients ba244e880a
