To evaluate the pharmacokinetics of an intravenous (i.v.) and subcutaneous (s.c.) two-injection regimen of an anti-IL-6 receptor monoclonal antibody, TCZ, in rheumatoid arthritis (RA) patients and to assess the influence of TCZ treatment on the course of RA. Eight patients with active RA received TCZ (8 mg/kg) in an i.v. two-injection regimen and in a s.c. two-injection regimen, in an open-labeled, single-dose study. TCZ pharmacokinetics were evaluated after the i.v. and s.c. injections and were analyzed using an open model. Blood samples were taken at 4, 8, 24, 48, 72, 96, 120 and 168 h after the start of administration for determination of TCZ concentrations. Blood samples were also taken at intervals during TCZ treatment and for 8 weeks after TCZ treatment, for determination of disease activity scores. TCZ serum concentrations after i.v. injection of TCZ were significantly higher than those after s.c. injection. Serum concentrations of TCZ after s.c. injection showed a maximum within the first week. Mean t(max) was 0.5 h after i.v. injection, 8 h after s.c. injection, and 4 weeks after treatment was initiated. The mean area under the serum concentration-time curve (AUC) was 6,925 (8) microg/h/mL after i.v. injection, 8,386 (20) microg/h/mL after s.c. injection and 21,827 (5) microg/h/mL after 4 weeks of treatment, which were all similar to those observed in healthy volunteers. Treatment with TCZ reduced the Disease Activity Score in 28 joints (DAS

It's time for another rendition of the movie "The Cretaceous" by Studio Dino Barreau. This time we take our crew to the ancient city of Asgard in the year 1921, where former lawman Josh and his companion Barry stumble upon a secret society, where an older woman named Viola seeks to undo the wrongdoings of her father. The two must fight against legions of creatures of fire, ice, and every other element to save the planet. In the process, they may even find their own heart's desires fulfilled.
