Xinhua news agency reported Sunday that all 27 cities, counties and prefectures in the capital have been ordered to require wearing masks in public areas as a general policy. Beijing mayor Chen Xiwu said it was urgent to "step up, find and educate" about the coronavirus, which is believed to have infected more than 2,600 people and killed 89 people in China. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox Chen said authorities will start training school and vocational school teachers and students to act as first responders and play a part in helping contain the spread of coronavirus. "Take this opportunity to teach them how to take good care of their health," said Chen, a medical doctor, adding, "They are our future generation." The city's Health Commission said nearly all schools are being disinfected and enforced personal hygiene policies. On Saturday, the city will begin implementing a "sense of emergency" round-the-clock air-quality monitoring program, setting out new vehicle numbers as well as street cleaning. "The air quality index will fall to a number that will not allow exposure to toxic pollutants, and will only show very low or very slight pollution," said Zhao Yan, deputy director of the city's Environmental Protection Bureau. The city will also release the results of a survey on whether to
