A pilot study was performed to evaluate the safety and efficacy of i.v. immunoglobulin (Ig) in nine patients with progressive systemic sclerosis (PSS). During a 9-month period, 18 i.v. Ig infusions were given at a dose of 0.4 g/kg, given over 2-4 weeks. Side effects were common, but did not adversely affect outcome. The single patient with scleroderma renal crisis had renal function improve on Ig, whereas another patient with PSS presented with severe Raynaud's phenomenon, which was noted to have improved following four of eight infusions of Ig. Overall, the 8-month course of i.v. Ig infusions was safe and well tolerated. Although the results of this pilot study are limited by its small size and its lack of an untreated control group, they suggest that i.v. Ig infusions could be a safe and potentially effective treatment for patients with progressive PSS. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a gas sensor, in particular to a gas sensor for detecting a specific gas in a gas mixture. 2.
