Platform: PC Interface language: English + Description: Autodesk Inventor LT 2008, a tool to create 2D drawings, based on Inventor technology, in which you can design and visualize any product. Various kinds of measurements, tools for describing cross sections, and new layout and visualization options help you quickly visualize complex components. This makes it easy to communicate technical information and then implement your drawings. The new Geometry Analysis module helps you create and verify drawings using the geometry of structural elements. This includes connection lines, relationships that define hole locations, support locations, and circular elements. With this module, you can easily create drawings with feature locations based on the geometry within the drawings. This allows you to speed up the processing of drawings, and to simplify the preparation of drawings for printing. With this module you can create layout drawings based on the geometry located within the drawings. This speeds up the processing of drawings as well as making it easier to prepare drawings for printing. What do you need the component location drawing module for? A new block will appear on the sheet to indicate the location on the drawing. The block will indicate the names of the components, their location and other graphic information. Display the "Sheet Block" and "Drawing Block" toolbars. From the Tools menu, choose Layers Block. In the Layers Block dialog box, click Create Block to create a new block. By default, one of the items set as a block is used as the block location. The Location list displays the names of items that can be used as blocks.
