The government is investigating one of the biggest pharmacy benefits managers in the U.S. Cigna is the target of a Justice Department investigation into allegations of anticompetitive practices, The Wall Street Journal reported on Wednesday. Cigna is one of the biggest pharmaceutical benefits managers in the U.S., serving as a pharmacy-advocacy group for health-insurance companies such as UnitedHealth, Kaiser and Aetna. ADVERTISEMENT Prosecutors could seek to unravel the $166 billion-a-year industry, which negotiates drug prices and other care services for nearly 20 million members of employer-based plans, according to the Journal. Cigna is accused of improperly influencing doctors to prescribe treatments that saved insurers money, a practice known as "utilization management." The company was also accused of aggressively cutting prescription drugs to increase costs for millions of consumers, the paper reported, citing documents and interviews with people familiar with the investigation. Cigna denied the charges in a statement to the Journal, saying the company does not have a policy of excessive or unreasonable price cuts. The claims center on Cigna's relationship with drugstore giants Walgreens Boots Alliance and Rite Aid. Cigna and Walgreens denied any wrongdoing. Rite Aid said it does not negotiate drug prices for members and is not under investigation. Cigna is the second big pharmacy benefits manager under scrutiny in recent months. In January, several state attorneys general announced they were launching a probe into AmerisourceBergen, the largest PBMs, which also controlled more than 50 percent of the market. There's no question that the Minnesota Vikings are the NFL's worst team right now. According to model developed by Football Outsiders, the Vikings are the only team to be worse than the Houston Texans, who sit at 4-6 and in a full-blown rebuild. They also happen to be the only team in the NFL with a quarterback who's played more snaps than Kirk Cousins.
